

Synopsis

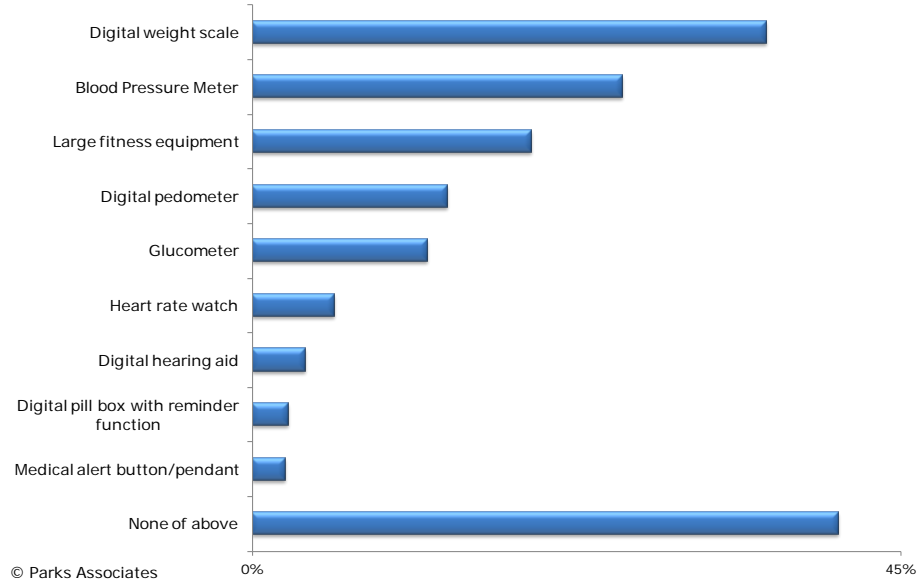

This report examines the market for networked medical devices for personal/home use.

It also analyzes the technology trends that impact the design and use cases of these devices in meeting consumer DIY care needs.

Consumer Ownership of Personal Medical Devices

Healthcare Product Ownership

(U.S. Broadband Households)

Publish Date: 4Q 13

"With networking technology integrating into devices that capture patient vital signs and help diagnose health conditions, health professionals are able to extend the point of care to locations more convenient to patients, most notably the household," said Harry Wang, Director, Health and Mobile Product Research, Parks Associates. "Networked medical devices enable patient-centered care and drive care cost away from the most expensive premises."

The Bottom Line

1.0 Report Summary

- 1.1 Purpose and Scope of Report
- 1.2 Research Approach

2.0 Networked Medical Device Industry Overview

- 2.1 Consumer Ownership and Purchase Behaviors
- 2.2 Medical Device by Category
 - 2.2.1 Glucometer, Insulin Pump, and CGMS
 - 2.2.2 Cardiac Care: ECG, Event Recorder, and the Implantable
 - 2.2.3 Blood Pressure Monitor
 - 2.2.4 Pulse Oximeter
 - 2.2.5 Home Sleep Apnea Test Kit and Sleep Monitoring Devices
 - 2.2.6 Home INR/PT Test
 - 2.2.7 Digital Weight Scale and Others
 - 2.2.8 Health Data Gateway
- 2.3 Software-based Solutions

3.0 Technology Impact on Networked Medical Device Market

3.1 Networking technology
 3.2 Semiconductor Market for Medical Devices
 3.3 Cloud Services for Health Care

4.0 Impact of Health Care Reforms and FDA Regulation Changes
 4.1 Health Care Reform and Payment Model Changes
 4.2 510(K) Reform, MDDS and MMA Regulations

5.0 Market Forecasts
 5.1 Market Drivers and Inhibitors
 5.2 Forecast Methodology
 5.3 Forecasts of U.S. Networked Medical Device Sales (2013-2018)

6.0 Market Implications and Recommendations
